Overview & Background

Civic Switchboard is an Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS) supported effort that aims to develop the capacity of academic and public libraries in civic data ecosystems. We encourage partnerships between libraries and local data intermediaries that will better serve data users, further democratize data, and support equitable access to information. The project team includes representation from academic libraries, public libraries, Pitt's school of Computing and Information, Pittsburgh's regional open data portal, and the National Neighborhood Indicators Partnership. During the course of our project, we have worked directly with over 14 teams of library workers and civic data partners from a range of cities and regions around the US.

One of our project's main outputs is the creation of a guide for libraries interested in expanding (or beginning) their role around civic information. Rather than a step-by-step "how to", the guide is meant to give library workers (and their collaborators) a conceptual frame, emphasizing engagement in civic data work through partnerships and strong regional grounding. It also features several case studies from libraries around the country whose work exemplifies the diversity of roles that a library might play around civic data. The guide also includes several tools (prompts, worksheets, workshop materials) to support practical activity. You can learn more at the project website and blog.

The designer will primarily communicate with the Project Manager and Principal Investigator who will be available to regularly provide feedback.

Detailed Specifications

Through this RFQ, we are looking for a designer that can:

1. Design and create a print-ready, stand-alone version of the guide in a digital document format (e.g. PDF). The guide is approximately 60-70 pages, and it is organized into nine sections, some with further sub-sections. The design should include:
 - graphic cover design
 - selection of typography
 - selection of images and/or graphical icons throughout
 - content boxes and pull quotes

2. Develop a second publication, with the Civic Switchboard project team, for a derivative, more graphical product(s) for a non-invested audience that focuses on the most-relatable elements from the Civic Switchboard project, for example, highlighting the potential civic data roles for libraries and the most compelling case studies. Design and execute the resulting product(s) to produce a print-ready digital document.

Designer will deliver a copy of all work files to the client so the client has the ability to modify or update product content in the future.

For both of these products, we anticipate the designer will primarily draw on text and image content already produced by the project.

The primary audience is people working in libraries who are doing, or may do the work our project describes and promotes. Within this audience, we expect the first output (full guide) will be of greater interest to those most directly involved in doing the work, and the second output (high-level highlights) will be of greater interest to administrators and other decision-makers. Secondary audiences are those who may partner with libraries on civic data work, or who have a general interest in civic data. Examples of similar products we have used as inspiration:

“Strategy 2020 - 2022”, The Engine Room <https://www.theengineroom.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/08/TER-Strategy-2020-22-Full.pdf>

“Report to the City”, Monument Lab <https://monumentlab.com/publications/report-to-the-city> (They also printed this in oversized newsprint for distribution)
